HEARING DECISION

Following Claimant's request for a hearing, this matter is before the undersigned Administrative Law Judge pursuant to MCL 400.9 and 400.37; 42 CFR 431.200 to 431.250; and 45 CFR 205.10. After due notice, a telephone hearing was held on July 9, 2014, from Detroit, Michigan. Participants on behalf of Claimant included AHR ██████████ ██████████. Participants on behalf of the Department of Human Services (Department) included ██████████, Eligibility Specialist.

ISSUE

Whether the Department properly determined that Claimant was not disabled for purposes of the Medical Assistance (MA) and/or State Disability Assistance (SDA) benefit programs?

FINDINGS OF FACT

1. Claimant applied for MA-P on February 21, 2014.
2. Claimant is 42 years old.
3. Claimant has a limited education.
4. Claimant has a past work history consisting of press operator
5. These jobs were performed at the light levels.
6. These jobs required standing for at least 8 hours per day, and carrying up to 20 pounds of weight.
7. Claimant has a medical history consisting of stroke, DVT, and pulmonary embolism.
8. Claimant was hospitalized in in July 2013 and November, 2013 with symptoms related to these impairments.

9. No treating source limitations have been given, though an independent exam conducted in April, 2014, showed some limitations of movement, residual left hemiparesis, some muscle weakness, and pain; Claimant was not shown to have a need for an assistive device to walk.
10. Per testimony, Claimant can perform most activities of daily living, including basic chores, grooming, cooking, grocery and grocery shopping.
11. Claimant testified that she provides child care for her grandchildren regularly.
12. Claimant is currently taking medications, but does not experience significant side effects beyond occasional drowsiness.
13. Claimant testified to no sitting limitations.
14. Claimant testified that she is on a less than 5 pound lifting restriction, but no medical evidence was submitted in support of that limitation; furthermore, Claimant testified to carrying her grandchildren regularly.
15. On March 28, 2014, the Medical review team denied MA-P, stating that Claimant did not meet durational requirements.
16. On April 2, 2014, Claimant was sent a notice of case action.
17. On June 10, 2014, Claimant requested a hearing.
18. On July 14, 2014, the State Hearing Review Team denied MA-P on the basis of a Social Security evaluation.
19. On October 8, 2014, an administrative hearing was held.
20. The record was extended for additional medical documentation.

CONCLUSIONS OF LAW

The Medical Assistance (MA) program is established by the Title XIX of the Social Security Act, 42 USC 1396-1396w-5, and is implemented by 42 CFR 400.200 to 1008.59. The Department of Human Services (formerly known as the Family Independence Agency) administers the MA program pursuant to MCL 400.10 and MCL 400.105.

The State Disability Assistance (SDA) program, which provides financial assistance for disabled persons, was established by 2004 PA 344. The Department administers the SDA program pursuant to MCL 400.10 et seq. and Mich Admin Code, Rules 400.3151 – 400.3180. Department policies are found in BAM, BEM, and RFT. A person is considered disabled for SDA purposes if the person has a physical or mental impairment which meets federal Supplemental Security Income (SSI) disability standards for at least ninety days. Receipt of SSI benefits based on disability or blindness, or the receipt of MA benefits based on disability or blindness, automatically qualifies an individual as disabled for purposes of the SDA program.

Federal regulations require that the Department use the same operative definition of the term “disabled” as is used by the Social Security Administration for Supplemental Security Income (SSI) under Title XVI of the Social Security Act. 42 CFR 435.540(a). Disability is defined as the inability to do any substantial gainful activity by reason of any medically determinable physical or mental impairment which can be expected to result in death or which has lasted or can be expected to last for a continuous period of not less than 12 months. 20 CFR 416.905

This is determined by a five step sequential evaluation process where current work activity, the severity and duration of the impairment(s), statutory listings of medical impairments, residual functional capacity, and vocational factors (i.e., age, education, and work experience) are considered. These factors are always considered in order according to the five step sequential evaluation, and when a determination can be made at any step as to the Claimant’s disability status, no analysis of subsequent steps are necessary. 20 CFR 416.920

The first step that must be considered is whether the Claimant is still partaking in Substantial Gainful Activity (SGA). 20 CFR 416.920(b). To be considered disabled, a person must be unable to engage in SGA. A person who is earning more than a certain monthly amount (net of impairment-related work expenses) is ordinarily considered to be engaging in SGA. The amount of monthly earnings considered as SGA depends on the nature of a person’s disability; the Social Security Act specifies a higher SGA amount for statutorily blind individuals and a lower SGA amount for non-blind individuals. Both SGA amounts increase with increases in the national average wage index. The monthly SGA amount for statutorily blind individuals for 2014 is $1,800. For non-blind individuals, the monthly SGA amount for 2014 is $1,070.

In the current case, Claimant has testified that they are not working, and the Department has presented no evidence or allegations that Claimant is engaging in SGA. Therefore, the Administrative Law Judge finds that the Claimant is not engaging in SGA, and thus passes the first step of the sequential evaluation process.

The second step that must be considered is whether or not the Claimant has a severe impairment. A severe impairment is an impairment expected to last 12 months or more (or result in death), which significantly limits an individual’s physical or mental ability to perform basic work activities. The term “basic work activities” means the abilities and aptitudes necessary to do most jobs. Examples of these include:

- (1) Physical functions such as walking, standing, sitting, lifting, pushing, pulling, reaching, carrying or handling;

- (2) Capacities for seeing, hearing, and speaking;
- (3) Understanding, carrying out, and remembering simple instructions;
- (4) Use of judgment;
- (5) Responding appropriately to supervision, co-workers and usual work situations; and
- (6) Dealing with changes in a routine work setting. 20 CFR 416.921(b).

The purpose of the second step in the sequential evaluation process is to screen out claims lacking in medical merit. Higgs v. Bowen 880 F2d 860, 862 (6th Cir, 1988). As a result, the Department may only screen out claims at this level which are “totally groundless” solely from a medical standpoint. This is a de minimus standard in the disability determination that the court may use only to disregard trifling matters. As a rule, any impairment that can reasonably be expected to significantly impair basic activities is enough to meet this standard.

In the current case, Claimant has presented medical evidence of stroke with residual left hemiparesis, according to the great weight of the evidence by both the Department and Claimant’s treating sources. The symptoms described by the Claimant, and supported by independent medical evidence, support the existence of a condition that would result in an impairment that would limit Claimant’s ability to perform basic work activities. Claimant has some pain and reduced range of motion. The medical records show that the Claimant’s impairment can be expected to last 12 months, given the chronic nature of the impairment. Claimant thus passes step two of our evaluation.

In the third step of the sequential evaluation, we must determine if the Claimant’s impairment is listed in Appendix 1 of Subpart P of 20 CFR, Part 404. This is, generally speaking, an objective standard; either Claimant’s impairment is listed in this appendix, or it is not. However, at this step, a ruling against the Claimant does not direct a finding of “not disabled”; if the Claimant’s impairment does not meet or equal a listing found in Appendix 1, the sequential evaluation process must continue on to step four.

The Administrative Law Judge finds that the Claimant’s medical records do not contain medical evidence of an impairment that meets or equals a listed impairment.

In making this determination, the undersigned has considered listings in 11.00 (Neurological) and 12.00 (Mental). Claimant has not provided medical evidence required to find disability at this step. The medical evidence presented does not support a finding of disability at this step, as there is no evidence that Claimant has lasting gross disorganization of motor function in two or more extremities or sensory or motor aphasia. There is no evidence that Claimant has marked difficulties in at least two of the domains associated with mental impairments. Therefore, the Claimant cannot be found to be disabled at this step, based upon medical evidence alone. 20 CFR 416.920(d). We must thus proceed to the next steps, and evaluate Claimant's vocational factors.

Evaluation under the disability regulations requires careful consideration of whether the Claimant can do past relevant work (PRW), which is our step four, and if not, whether they can reasonably be expected to make vocational adjustments to other work, which is our step five. When the individual's residual functional capacity (RFC) precludes meeting the physical and mental demands of PRW, consideration of all facts of the case will lead to a finding that

- 1) the individual has the functional and vocational capacity to for other work, considering the individual's age, education and work experience, and that jobs which the individual could perform exist in significant numbers in the national economy, or
- 2) The extent of work that the Claimant can do, functionally and vocationally, is too narrow to sustain a finding of the ability to engage in SGA. SSR 86-8.

Given that the severity of the impairment must be the basis for a finding of disability, steps four and five of the sequential evaluation process must begin with an assessment of the Claimant's functional limitations and capacities. After the RFC assessment is made, we must determine whether the individual retains the capacity to perform PRW. Following that, an evaluation of the Claimant's age, education and work experience and training will be made to determine if the Claimant retains the capacity to participate in SGA.

RFC is an assessment of an individual's ability to do sustained work-related physical and mental activities in a work setting on a regular and continuing basis—meaning 8 hours a day, 5 days a week, or an equivalent work schedule. RFC assessments may only consider functional limitations and restrictions that result from a Claimant's medically determinable impairment, including the impact from related symptoms. It is important to note that RFC is not a measure of the least an individual can do despite their limitations, but rather, the most. Furthermore, medical impairments and symptoms, including pain, are not intrinsically exertional or nonexertional; the functional limitations caused by medical impairments and symptoms are placed into the exertional and nonexertional categories. SSR 96-8p, 20 CFR 416.945 (a).

However, our RFC evaluations must necessarily differ between steps four and five. At step four of the evaluation process, RFC must not be expressed initially in terms of the step five exertional categories of "sedentary", "light", "medium", "heavy", and "very heavy" work because the first consideration in step four is whether the Claimant can do PRW as they actually performed it. Such exertional categories are useful to determine whether a Claimant can perform at their PRW as is normally performed in the national economy, but this is generally not useful for a step four determination because particular occupations may not require all of the exertional and nonexertional demands necessary to do a full range of work at a given exertional level. SSR 96-8p.

Therefore, at this step, it is important to assess the Claimant's RFC on a function-by-function basis, based upon all the relevant evidence of an individual's ability to do work related activities. Only at step 5 can we consider the Claimant's exertional category.

An RFC assessment must be based on all relevant evidence in the case record, such as medical history, laboratory findings, the effects of treatments (including limitations or restrictions imposed by the mechanics of treatment), reports of daily activities, lay evidence, recorded observations, medical treating source statements, effects of symptoms (including pain) that are reasonably attributed to the impairment, and evidence from attempts to work. SSR 96-8p.

RFC assessments must also address both the remaining exertional and nonexertional capacities of the Claimant. Exertional capacity addresses an individual's limitations and restrictions of physical strength, and the Claimant's ability to perform everyday activities such as sitting, standing, walking, lifting, carrying, pushing and pulling; each activity must be considered separately. Nonexertional capacity considers all work-related limitations and restrictions that do not depend on an individual's physical strength, such as the ability to stoop, climb, reach, handle, communicate and understand and remember instructions.

Symptom, such as pain, are neither exertional or nonexertional limitations; however such symptoms can often affect the capacity to perform activities as contemplated above and thus, can cause exertional or nonexertional limitations. SSR 96-8.

In the current case, Claimant has documented symptoms of stroke, with residual left hemiparesis. Claimant has also had symptoms consistent with pulmonary embolism, DVT, and pain. Medical reports, supplied by the Claimant and Department, indicate that Claimant has difficulty standing for long periods of time, and difficulty lifting very heavy weights (though no specific medical weight limitations have been imposed). Claimant has reduced range of motion. Claimant does not appear to have any sensory deficits, but, per an independent psychological report, may be limited in mental residual functional capacity to simple tasks.

From these reports, the Administrative Law Judge concludes that Claimant has a disabling impairment for the purposes of standing and walking for long periods of time. Claimant has some limitations in the use of their hands for manipulation. Claimant has some postural limitations (e.g. stooping, bending, and crouching). Claimant has no visual limitations or communicative (hearing, speaking) limitations. Claimant is not medically restricted from lifting, though a 10 pound limitation would seem reasonable from the medical records.

Claimant's PRW includes press operator. These jobs, as typically performed and described by the Claimant, require standing and walking for long periods of time, as well as lifting up to 20 pounds of weight. Therefore, given the functional requirements as stated by Claimant (which is consistent with how these jobs are typically performed) for these jobs, and Claimant's functional limitations as described above, the Administrative Law Judge concludes that Claimant does not retain the capacity to perform their past relevant work.

In the fifth step of the sequential consideration of a disability claim, the Administrative Law Judge must determine if the Claimant's impairment(s) prevents Claimant from doing other work. 20 CFR 416.920(f). This determination is based upon the Claimant's:

- (1) residual functional capacity defined simply as "what can you still do despite your limitations?" 20 CFR 416.945;
- (2) age, education, and work experience, 20 CFR 416.963-.965; and
- (3) the kinds of work which exist in significant numbers in the national economy which the Claimant could perform despite his/her limitations. 20 CFR 416.966.

See Felton v DSS 161 Mich. App 690, 696 (1987).

At step five, RFC must be expressed in terms of, or related to, the exertional categories when the adjudicator determines whether there is other work that the individual can do. However, in order for an individual to do a full range of work at a given exertional level, such as sedentary, the individual must be able to perform substantially all of the exertional and nonexertional functions required at that level. SSR 96-8p. The individual has the burden of proving that they are disabled and of raising any issue bearing on that determination or decision. SSR 86-8.

If the remaining physical and mental capacities are consistent with meeting the physical and mental demands of a significant number of jobs in the national economy, and the Claimant has the vocational capabilities (considering age, education and past work experience) to make an adjustment to work different from that performed in the past, it shall be determined that the Claimant is not disabled. However, if the Claimant's physical, mental and vocational capacities do not allow the individual to adjust to work different from that performed in the past, it shall be determined at this step that the Claimant is disabled. SSR 86-8.

For the purpose of determining the exertional requirements of work in the national economy, jobs are classified as "sedentary", "light", "medium", "heavy", and "very heavy". These terms have the same meaning as are used in the Dictionary of Occupational Titles. In order to evaluate the Claimant's skills and to help determine the existence in the national economy of work the Claimant is able to do, occupations are classified as unskilled, semiskilled and skilled. SSR 86-8.

These aspects are tied together through use of the rules established in Appendix 2 to Subpart P of the regulations (20 CR 404, Appendix 2 to Subpart P, Section 200-204 et. seq) to make a determination as to disability. They reflect the analysis of the various vocational factors (i.e., age, education, and work experience) in combination with the individual's residual functional capacity (used to determine his or her maximum sustained work capability for sedentary, light, medium, heavy, or very heavy work) in evaluating the individual's ability to engage in substantial gainful activity in other than his or her vocationally relevant past work. Where the findings of fact made with respect to a particular individual's vocational factors and residual functional capacity coincide with all of the criteria of a particular rule, the rule directs a conclusion as to whether the individual is or is not disabled. 20 CFR 404, Subpart P, Appendix 2, Rule 200.00(a).

In the application of the rules, the individual's residual functional capacity, age, education, and work experience must first be determined. The correct disability decision (i.e., on the issue of ability to engage in substantial gainful activity) is found by then locating the individual's specific vocational profile. Since the rules are predicated on an individual's having an impairment which manifests itself by limitations in meeting the strength requirements of jobs, they may not be fully applicable where the nature of an individual's impairment does not result in such limitations, e.g., certain mental, sensory, or skin impairments. 20 CFR 404, Subpart P, Appendix 2, Rule 200.00(c)-200.00(d).

In the evaluation of disability where the individual has solely a nonexertional type of impairment, determination as to whether disability exists shall be based on the principles in the appropriate sections of the regulations, giving consideration to the rules for specific case situations. The rules do not direct factual conclusions of disabled or not disabled for individuals with solely nonexertional types of impairments. 20 CFR 404, Subpart P, Appendix 2, Rule 200.00(e)(1).

However, where an individual has an impairment or combination of impairments resulting in both strength limitations and nonexertional limitations, the rules are considered in determining first whether a finding of disabled may be possible based on the strength limitations alone; if not, the rule(s) reflecting the individual's maximum residual strength capabilities, age, education, and work experience provide a framework for consideration of how much the individual's work capability is further diminished in terms of any types of jobs that would be contraindicated by the nonexertional limitations. Furthermore, when there are combinations of nonexertional and exertional limitations which cannot be wholly determined under the rules, full consideration must be given to all of the relevant facts in the case in accordance with the definitions and discussions of each factor in the appropriate sections of the regulations, which will provide insight into the adjudicative weight to be accorded each factor.

Claimant is 42 years old, with an unskilled work history at the light level. Claimant's exertional impairments likely render Claimant at least able to perform work at the sedentary level. Claimant has no medical lifting restrictions, but it is reasonable that the impairments listed by Claimant's hospitalization records would prevent lifting of heavy weight; Claimant testified to difficulty with standing and walking for long periods of time. No treating source statements are given with regard to functional limitations, but the undersigned gives the Claimant the benefit of the doubt and finds Claimant credible when they testified that they are unable to walk or stand long distances. Claimant testified to no particular restrictions with sitting down for an extended period of time. Claimant can perform most activities of daily living. While Claimant testified to lifting limitations above 5 pounds Claimant also testified that she regularly carried her grandchildren; the undersigned finds Claimant's testimony in this instance less than credible. Claimant testified to an inability to use her left hand; however in light of the above statement regarding carrying her grandchildren, this statement is also found less than credible. Furthermore, independent and treating source statements indicate residual left hemiparesis and muscle weakness; no report shows complete left hemiparesis. Thus, while Claimant may have some reduction in the use of her left hand, no medical report shows complete inability to use this hand.

Thus, given that there are no treating source limitations given, and given that the Claimant has no medically defined lifting restrictions, and given that the Claimant may have trouble standing for long periods of time, and lifting heavy weights (but is still able to participate in the care of her grandchildren) the Administrative Law Judge finds that Claimant does not have restrictions on sitting, and could stand, per the medical record, for at least 2 hours intermittently over the course of an 8 hour day, which is not inconsistent with a full range of sedentary work.

Therefore, using a combination of Claimant's age, education level (which does not provide for direct entry into skilled work), and skilled work experience, a finding of not disabled is directed. 20 CFR 404, Subpart P, Appendix 2, Rule 201.24.

As stated above, where an individual has an impairment or combination of impairments resulting in both strength limitations and nonexertional limitations, the rules are considered in determining first whether a finding of disabled may be possible based on the strength limitations alone. However, while Claimant testified to nonexertional limitations or impairments with relation to their pain and medication regimen, Claimant has not stated exactly how these limitations from their impairment would prevent work based activities.

With regard to Claimant's allegations of pain there is no indication that this condition would substantially compromise their occupational base, except for some moderate impairment in concentration and judgment that may provide some slight limitations with regard to skilled work. While Claimant alleges memory impairments, Claimant is not receiving regular psychological treatment; treating source documentation of this impairment appears to consist entirely of general observation, with no specific medical grounding. An independent examination does find memory limitations, but also notes that Claimant should have no problem with simple tasks, which does not considerably limit the sedentary occupational base. With regard to medications, Claimant has alleged no significant side effects from the usage of these medications beyond occasional drowsiness. Thus, Claimant has not alleged any non-exertional limitations that are consistent with the medical record that would significantly compromise a full range of sedentary employment.

As such, the undersigned holds that Claimant retains the residual functional capacity to perform a full range of sedentary work. As Claimant retains the capacity to perform a full range of sedentary work, a finding of not disabled is directed by rule. The Department was correct in its assessment and must be upheld.

The Administrative Law Judge, based on the above Findings of Fact and Conclusions of Law, and for the reasons stated on the record, if any, finds Claimant not disabled for purposes of the MA and/or SDA benefit program.
